Florence Farmer Makes Record Soybean Yield

Gause joins 100 Bushel Club

Daniel P. Gause of Scranton has broken the South Carolina soybean non-irrigated yield record with 109.69 bushels per acre in 2014. Only a handful of farmers across the country have yields of more than 100 bushels per acre.

Daniel Gause planted Pioneer 54T94 hybrid seed.

The original farm was designated a "SC Century Farm" by the Century Farm Commission in 2014. Gause farms land that has been in his family for 120 years, inheriting the jobs that were done by his father, grandfather, great-grandfather and great-great-grandfather. He has expanded the farm from its initial 45 acres to approximately 2,400 acres in Florence County.

Gause has also won first place for four consecutive years in the South Carolina Non-irrigated Corn Yield Contest and placed third in the 2012 National Corn Growers contest.

The winners of the 2014 Palmetto Soybean Yield Contest, irrigated, were: first place, Wells Flowers, Darlington County, 79 bushels; second place, Brubaker Farms, Bamberg County, 73 bushels; third place, Brubaker Farms, Bamberg County, 72 bushels (using different brands and hybrids).

Winners of the non-irrigated category were: first place, Daniel Gause, Florence County, 109 bushels; second place, John Gause, Lee County, 96 bushels; third place, William Thomas, Williamsburg County, 92 bushels.

The winners of the 2014 Palmetto Corn Yield Contest, irrigated, were first place, Jameson Farms, Orangeburg County, 310 bushels; second place, Daniel Garrick, Orangeburg County, 302 bushels; third place, Panola Enterprises, Clarendon County, 291 bushels.

In the non-irrigated category, winners were: first place, Dan Gause, Florence County, 316 bushels; second place, William Thomas, Florence County, 309 bushels; third place, Scott Jackson, Clarendon County, 261 bushels.

The average state yield for soybeans on non-irrigated land is 35 bushels per acre.

Fresh Produce at Convenience Stores?

We ran across a very interesting concept recently: fresh food in convenience stores. We know that convenience stores are, well, convenient. People run in, grab a few items, and rush out. But they can buy only what is in the store, and fresh food hasn't usually been available.

Two trade associations, the United Fresh Produce Association and the National Association of Convenience Stores, are looking into ways to put fresh produce into convenience stores across the country. Interestingly, a good many of these stores are located in "food deserts," or areas where healthy, affordable food or supermarkets are not easily accessible. We have written about food deserts in South Carolina several times in The Market Bulletin.

According to The Produce News, a publication for producers and retailers, convenience stores are looking for new markets. They are also interested in offering alternatives to packaged snacks. We all know that healthy food choices are the foundation for healthy lifestyles, and stores are exploring ways to make these options feasible for people on the go.

Annie's Project Teaches Women about Farming

Annie's Project is a national program that teaches women about farm management skills in a comfortable, relaxed setting. The four-day workshop is being offered in Hartsville in June.

Annie grew up in a small town in Illinois, married a farmer, and spent her lifetime learning how to be an involved business partner with her husband. Together they did great things, but it wasn't easy. Annie's Project is based on the lessons Annie learned and her personal experiences to provide important information for women who live and work in a farm business.

Facilitated by professionals and experts in the field of business and agriculture, Annie's Project is for farm women. It is hands-on, not just lectures. Topics include risk assessments, business planning, financial statements, family and liability insurance, farm programs, legal concerns, retirement and transition, and personal development.

Participants will learn about important topics that are relevant to their future in farming. They will discover available resources and network with other farm women. For example, they can learn to promote their farm through social media and how to work with other individuals on the farm.

The program begins Thursday evening, June 11, and concludes by noon on Sunday, June 14, in Hartsville. The fee of $175 per person includes all workshop materials, activities, lodging at Hampton Inn, meals, and more. Private rooms are available for an additional fee.

Space for Annie's Project is limited. Register by May 15 online at www.clemson.edu/scwagn or call Jennifer Boyles, Darlington County Extension Agent, at 843-616-0786.

Touch A Truck Raises Money

The Junior League of Columbia hosted its annual Touch A Truck event at the State Farmers Market in West Columbia April 11. Over 2,000 people attended the event where children of all ages were able to touch, climb on, and learn more about farming equipment, big rigs, trucks, and heavy machinery. Monies raised will stay in the Midlands community to promote healthy kids.

Mushrooms Are a Growing Business

Five years ago, Mepkin Abbey jumped into the mushroom business in Berkeley County. Now, consumers are paying good prices for local organic mushrooms.

While Mepkin Abbey sits on thousands of acres near Moncks Corner, only a tiny portion of their property is used for mushroom production. The heart of their operation is a giant refrigerated room full of decomposing matter. As they handle crates of oyster and shiitake mushrooms, the Catholic monks have to wear masks to prevent breathing in fungus spores.

But their business is growing. A recent order for 230 bulk cases was their largest ever, as consumers demand high quality, locally grown food.

Commissioner of Agriculture Hugh Weathers visited the Moncks Corner facility recently, noting that Berkeley County is also cultivating tourists.

"Tourism is a good crop," Weathers said.

"Down here where there are more people than farms, I think agritourism has a lot of potential."

Jimmy Livingston, the Abbey's mushroom operation manager, commented that people gobble up anything that grows in this state.

Weathers said the focus on local food is part of a growing wave of new consumers: the Millennials. This group wants to know their farmers as well as where their food comes from. Mushrooms are just one of the many specialty foods being produced across the state.

South Carolina spends $10 billion annually on food. The more money that stays in the state, the better for the economy, Weathers said, adding that it's his job to grow farming. That means more farmers and more people buying South Carolina products.

With the Certified South Carolina Grown program now seven years old, agriculture has an impact of $42 billion. Weathers wants to see that figure grow to $50 billion by 2020.

Convenience Stores

The concept can be compared to offering salad bars in school cafeterias, or our Fresh on the Menu program. If people have a choice, they prefer fresh food. Some convenience stores, which the association calls “gas stations with stores attached,” are already offering bananas and apples. Apparently these year-round fruits are good sellers, so the next logical step is to offer more fresh foods. I am excited about the concept.

The biggest challenge is keeping the produce fresh, because nobody wants wilted food. Most of these stores are already selling dairy products, so they are familiar with limited shelf life. There should not be too many unmanageable obstacles to handling the new products that consumers want. At first glance, the effort appears to be a win-win-win for convenience stores, the public, and the fresh produce industry. There are some details to work out, but every new venture has its challenges.

Distribution is the key to getting these fresh foods into the stores. For example, if a farmer handles his own produce, he could make his own deliveries within a comfortable distance. Food handling is another issue, which means store personnel would have to learn about food safety. But, for every great new opportunity, there’s always work involved.

We think the larger, more progressive convenience stores could push fresh apples, oranges, pears, and items with a longer shelf life. Spinx, a chain of high-end convenience stores with headquarters in Greenville, already sells hot foods made to order, plus a limited supply of salads and fruits. I had the chance to visit their operation last year and was very impressed with what they’re doing. While most of their stores are in the Upstate, Spinx has half a dozen or so locations in the Columbia area and a few in Charleston. They offer bakery goods and custom sandwiches, so it’s not a stretch to think they could add dedicated merchandizing space and a refrigerated case for fresh produce.

Just think, when you fill up your gas tank, wouldn’t it be great to get fresh fruits or veggies too?

Pesticide Collection Events Help the Environment

Disposing of pesticides can be burdensome for consumers, due to the many restrictions imposed by the government on handling chemicals.

The S.C. Department of Agriculture teamed up with the County of Lexington Solid Waste Management Department to make it easier for people to get rid of unwanted pesticides. On April 11, the two agencies hosted a very successful pesticide collection at Crossroads Middle School.

Although most of the recycling event was for residents of Lexington and Richland Counties, waste pesticides were accepted from residents anywhere in the state, at no cost. During the day, a total of 868 cars came through, and the waste management site collected close to 8,000 pounds of unwanted pesticides. John Stokes, SCDA’s Consumer Services Manager, was impressed by the quantities collected.

He also noted the importance of a collaboration such as this. “Folks need a safe disposal program to help prevent contamination of our land and water supply,” Stokes said. “This is something we were able to provide, and it was greatly needed.”

SCDA has scheduled another pesticide collection on May 15, this time partnering with Richland County Solid Waste and Recycling Department. The event will be held from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the S.C. State Fairgrounds, 1200 Rosewood Drive, Columbia. The department will have personnel on site to monitor pesticide collection. Each participant will be limited to 2,500 pounds of solid and/or 300 gallons of liquid pesticide formulations. Pesticide products include herbicides, insecticides, nematocides, fungicides, and other similar products used in agricultural production or around the home.

For more information regarding pesticide collection, contact SCDA’s John Stokes at 803-737-9696. For more information on Richland Recycles, contact Richland County Solid Waste and Recycling Department at 803-576-2446.

Flower Festivals Well Attended

Staff Photo

Flowers are always a welcome sign of spring, and the three plant and flower festivals sponsored by the S.C. Department of Agriculture have become highlights of the season. The Pee Dee Festival in Florence saw near-record attendance of 29,807 people over the April 9-12 weekend. The Midlands festival had a sell-out crowd of vendors, and the Piedmont show was equally popular.

Staff Photo

The sheds at all three Farmers Markets were brimming with happy people who purchased colorful plants and unique items for their homes. Many consumers filled small wagons with their purchases, eager to get their new plants home and in the ground.
